STOCKHOLM, April 13

The Swedish government will provide American intelligence officials with a full report of the information obtained from Col. Stig Wennerstrom regarding his espionage for the Russians during the 5-year period he served as air attache at the Swedish Embassy in Washington.

This information, brought out in the course of ten months of intensive interrogation by Prosecutor Werner Ryhninger and his assistants, is understood to cover several hundred pages of a report now in the possession of the court here where the Swedish officer is on trial.

While Wennerstrom was stubborn and uncooperative under questioning and frequently contradictory, it is learned that he talked freely of his espionage involving foreign countries knowing this was outside the jurisdiction of the Swedish courts and could only bring him a reprimand for misbehavior.

Swedish government officials have been greatly disturbed from the outset of the Wennerstrom case regarding its possible repercussions in limiting the contacts of Swedish diplomats and service officers abroad, and are anxious to make amends by providing information which may serve at least to minimize the damage done by Wennerstrom.

Reports that Wennerstrom may have had a mysterious accomplice are refuted in the Swedish newspaper Expressen this evening in an interview with Gunther Otto Gustaf Prey, the 66-year-old stateless suspect now in Hamburg.

Prey admits having done "big business" with Wennerstrom but denies he was involved in spying. Prey confirmed that he was recently in Stockholm "to clear his name" and voluntarily explained to Prosecutor Ryhninger his relationship with Wennerstrom.

The secret trail moved swiftly today to the second charge against the Swedish officer dealing with his espionage in Washington.

According to Judge Aagren, who issues a communique after the day's hearings, Wennerstrom denied that information he handed over to the Russians in Washington was of importance to Swedish defense.
